MZWANELE MKALIPI
mzwanele.mkalipi@media24.com

Nomzamo High School learners were urged to take the baton and run with it as their future now lay in their hands.

This message was sent out during the donation of 45 tablets by the African Bank in partnership with Strong Schools at the school on Thursday 22 October. Strong Schools is non-profit organisation (NPO) that facilitates sustainable change in government schools. They design and guide school development journeys in order to build schools that are efficient and effective in their mandate.

It is hoped the gadgets will offer the learners the much-needed academic assistance to reach their full potential. Learners were encouraged to invest a lot of time into their education in order to reap the rewards.

Vonnie Mostert, chief executive officer (CEO) of Strong Schools, said he was delighted to be part of the initiative to help the country's future leaders. "We are here to provide support to yourselves and to make it possible for you to reach your full potential. I hope by having these tablets at your disposal will assist you to achieve meaningful results for the school," he said, adding they were planting a seed "and even if one tree grows out of this, we will have accomplished our mission".

Kennedy Dembe Tembe, head of corporate social investments at African Bank, said they were committed to education. He added that all their corporate social investment (CSI) funding is targeted at improving education outcomes for learners across the country.

"With Covid-19 we realise one of the biggest things we can do is save the academic year for the matriculants. When the opportunity came to support students from Nomzamo High school we jumped to try and make sure we have the equipment," he said.

Dembe Tembe said they were committed to supporting the nation and cherished every child.

thanked Strong Schools for their support, going back to 2016.

He said he was ecstatic with the results of the partnership as they reached the "children of our school".

"As the school, parents we need partnerships such as these if we want to succeed and achieve the intended results. In this day and age almost every learner has a mobile phone; so it is very important to have these gadgets so that valuable information can be able to reach them wherever they are," said Mgbanto.

Grade 12 learner Monde Gebevu told City

Vision they were happy with the donation. He said they previously struggled to make contact with their teachers.

"I believe these tablets will help us a great deal and make communication much easier. Even those that come after us will benefit from these tablets," he said.

KCT boss to be laid to rest

UNATHI OBOSE

The Khayelitsha Community Trust (KCT) is reeling following the death of its chief executive officer (CEO), Mkhululi Gaula. He died at Groote Schuur Hospital on Friday 16 October after a short illness.

Gaula has been at the helm of the KCT since its establishment by the City of Cape Town in 2003. KCT is tasked with developing commercial, residential and community facilities around Khayelitsha. The trust has been influential in the development of the Khayelitsha business node.

Family spokesperson, Nocebo Gaula, said the passing left a "huge vacuum" in the family. She described Gaula as a pillar of strength for the family. "Mkhululi died in hospital after he suffered meningitis. He was admitted in hospital a week before his death," said Nocebo.

She described him as a people's person. "He was a friendly person and always surrounded by people," she said.

Nocebo thanked all the people for supporting the family during their time of mourning.

"Since we received the news of his death people started coming in to console us. We appreciate their support and words of comfort," she declared.

Khayelitsha Development Forum (KDF) chair, Ndithini Tyhido, described Mkhululi's death as a loss to Khayelitsha as a whole. He said Gaula dedicated his life on developing Khayelitsha.

"KCT is one of the trusts that its purpose is to develop Khayelitsha. Mkhululi was at the forefront of Khayelitsha development. He died just after he signed an agreement with the City about the land near Khayelitsha Mall. That land has been approved now, it belongs to KCT and soon the mall will be constructed. And that was Mkhululi's work," said Tyhido.

Gaula leaves behind his two children, his mother and four siblings. He will be buried on Saturday 31 October at Mqanduli in the Eastern Cape.

KDF leader stoned

MZWANELE MKALIPI

Khayelitsha Development Forum (KDF) chair has poured cold water to wide spread reports that he was shot on Sunday evening, hours after leading a prayer meeting at the Khayelitsha stadium.

Ndithini Tyhido told City Vision he was driving on the N2 towards Nyanga when "a stone" hit his windscreen around 20:00 on Sunday 25 October. He was driving with his wife and were not injured.

Earlier in the day, Tyhido led a prayer meeting against extortion of local businesses by criminals.

Asked whether he thought the incident was linked to his utterances during the meeting, he said: "I cannot say if it is linked or not. But if it is linked, then it will mean the intended recipients have heard our message," he said, adding "we are not shaken".

Tyhido believes if the community is not safe then it meant everyone is not immune to such attacks.

"This has not detracted us in doing the work we are doing for Khayelitsha. All we can now do is to keep safe and keep going," said Tyhido.

When asked about opening a criminal case, Tyhido said he had not done so.

"We are just happy no one including my wife was injured during this incident.

"I will sit down and think of the way forward from now on," said Tyhido adding he was not really perturbed by the turnout of residents to the meeting as they were "scared".

"It is our responsibility as community leaders to give our communities hope at times like these. Community leadership is not about showing off old pictures of good times and cutting of ribbons," he wrote on his Facebook page.

Gatvol residents seek justice

unathi.obose@cityvision.co.za

Enough, is enough! This was the overwhelming message from scores of Khayelitsha people during a meeting held at the Khayelitsha stadium on Sunday 25 October.

The meeting was organised by the Khayelitsha Development Forum (KDF) in partnership with different church leaders in Khayelitsha to root out crime and intimidation aimed at local businesses and landlords.

The area has been polarised reports of thugs demanding “protection fee” from local business owners. It is alleged a group of thugs go around businesses asking for money to guard their business interests.

Zizi Kodwa, deputy minister of state security, attended the meeting to hear first hand some of the challenges faced by the businesses. Kodwa described the gathering as a warning sign to the criminals. He said residents are fed up with crime.

“I know Khayelitsha. I grew up in this area as a student. Once the residents gathered like this it demonstrates that they are tired. We (government) don’t want the community to take the law into their hands. We will work with the police to ensure that there’s peace,” he said, adding that their message to the criminals was simple “we are tired”.

KDF chair Ndithini Tyhido said the thugs targeted “the poorest of the poor. And now we are saying enough is enough”.

Tyhido said the practice began with Somali shopkeepers a while ago, but people kept quiet. “It has been going on and on till it gets to affect everyone,” said Tyhido. He said the meeting was about mobilising society to reclaim their streets from the criminals.

Tyhido said there were rumours that some local police officers worked with the criminals. “As the KDF we avoid to entertain the speculations. If people know any member of police who is involved they must bring the information forward,” he pleaded.

Commenting on the alleged collusion between the police and criminals, Kodwa said: “It is only community mobilisation like this that can identify those individuals that are working with criminals. And if there are any individuals in the police services we are saying we are coming for them, because they are making it difficult to fight crime,” said Kodwa.

A meat vendor stationed along Mew Way Road, near Endlovini informal settlement, said vendors are living in fear. “Our lives are in danger because of young people who are robbing us of our hard-earned cash,” said the woman, who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of further intimidation. She said a group of “young men” visit them monthly to demand protection money against criminals.

“They charge us R500 a month,” she said, adding that she paid from July to September.

The 64-year-old woman stated that not everyone paid and urged law enforcement to intervene. “I have been selling meat for six years and I have never been robbed,” she said, questioning the thugs’ rationale. She added that vendors knew each other well as well as the community making it difficult for criminals to target them.

Pastor Zikhona Mgyai from Christ Embassy Cape Town said as church leaders their aim was to revive community spirit. “We are here to bring hope. People are living in fear and their spirit is paralysed. So, we are trying to motivate and inspire them to stay strong,” said Mgyai.

She said prayer is the only weapon that can fix and heal the society. Mgyai vowed to continue having similar services until the community was free.

Parking illegally in CBD can cost you

The City of Cape Town says motorists ignoring parking bay time restrictions and illegal parking are becoming a headache.

Felicity Purchase, Mayco member for transport, says at the beginning of the lockdown fewer commuters visited the Cape Town central business district (CBD) allowing people to park close to their workplaces.

However, with the move to alert level one, traffic in the CBD has increased. “We are appealing to all residents and visitors to abide by the parking rules and to not use the parking bays for longer than the allocated time, be it a 30 minute or 60 minute on-street parking bay,” says Purchase, adding that this includes the illegal use of exclusive-use bays for loading and for those that require a special needs permit.

She warns that the City’s transport enforcement unit will be monitoring the situation closely.

According to Purchase the illegal use of parking bays impacts negatively on local businesses whose customers cannot find parking. She adds that local business owners are recovering from the impact of Covid-19 and are key job creators. “The private sector is pivotal to the recovery of our local economy and employment. Thus, I appeal to those who need all-day parking to make use of the parking spaces at the edge of the CBD or to rent parking in privately operated parking garages,” she says.

Purchase encourages people to make use of the MyCiTi bus service to get around the CBD. She says the City has assigned parking wardens to keep an eye on transgressors. Road users exceeding the time limit will be issued a fine of R300.” The main transgressions will be the overstaying of allowable time permitted by bays and the illegal use of exclusive-use bays – for example, parking in drop-and-go bays; in bays for those with special needs without a permit, or in loading bays.

The City is aiming to implement the new parking management contract in February 2021.

Books tackle literacy crisis

SAMANTHA LEE-JACOBS

Flooding the country with high-quality African books is the key to tackling South Africa's literacy crisis.

This is the objective of non-profit organisation Book Dash, who is reaching out to assist children, one story at a time.

With their overarching strategic objective to send an abundance of beautiful, culturally appropriate books to children who may not have been book owners before – the organisation has also published all its books online where they are free to read via their website or mobile app.

"The 2016 Progress in International Reading Literacy Study results indicated that 78% of the South African Grade 4 children could not read for meaning in any language (Howie, 2017).

"Although this is a complex issue, with many contributing factors, research clearly indicates that children who grow up in households where there are many books, and where they are often read to from a young age, have higher literacy levels than their peers," says Book Dash director Doriette Louw.

Louw says exposing children to books at home is beneficial to their education.

"Unfortunately, we know that many South African children grow up without books in the home: a reputable study by the South African Book Development Council found that 58% of households in South Africa don't own any leisure books, and this lack of reading resources at home exacerbates the existing inequalities and the literacy crisis," says Louw.

The extended lockdown and school closures have only worsened the crisis.

"During the Covid-19 lockdown period it was starkly highlighted how important it is that children have books at home that they own, and that are shared with them by the adults in their lives," says Louw.

The organisation was founded in 2014 as a vision project among friends.

Their aim was to pool their collective skills in the publishing industry and flood the country with new, high-quality, affordable African storybooks, says Louw.

"They realised that a very small minority of children in South Africa would ever be in the position to own books, because books are so expensive. In an unequal society like ours this means that books are an unaffordable luxury for families living in poverty," says Louw.

She adds that the first Book Dash events were held in May and June 2014 in Cape Town. Heartened by the quality of the books and the enthusiasm of the creative volunteers, co-founders Arthur Attwell, Michelle Matthews and Tarryn-Anne Anderson established Book Dash as a registered not-for-profit, voluntary association with the aim of continuing to create, print and distribute more books to children – and to prove that high-quality books in many languages can be affordably produced and distributed.

The Book Dash model cuts down about 80% of the normal publishing costs by harnessing the power of creative volunteers and condenses the traditional publishing model – which stretches over many months – into a 12-hour day based entirely on volunteer time, skill and passion, says Louw.

Distributing books to children is key in tackling literacy issues.

Volunteers are not paid, nor do they get writer's fees, illustration fees or design and editing fees.

"No-one is paid for their time at a Book Dash event – everyone regards their contribution as a gift to the world, and this enables Book Dash to break down the barriers to literacy by publishing incredibly affordable books where the only cost is printing. Because of this extreme reduction in production costs, we can offer our books at only R10 a copy to our partners who fund large print runs," says Louw.

Since then, there have been 16 Book Dash events where 146 original African children's books have been created.

"We know how important it is to be able to read books in the language that you are most familiar with, so the 146 stories have been translated into the official South African languages to build up a library of almost 500 titles," says Louw.

During lockdown, the organisation has continued printing and distributing books. For 2020 alone, 400 000 have been distributed, with the organisation printing its one millionth book this year.

"Distribution had to be different, with our distribution partners finding innovative ways to continue supporting the families they work with," Louw explains, adding: "This is an amazing milestone, but because we know how big the need is we are not slowing down – instead we are picking up the pace to print and distribute many millions more in the years to come."

Additionally, their books are often part of support packs that are given to families and include food and educational materials.

Reading with your children

Below are some tips for parents and caregivers on the importance of reading.

- Reading is a wonderful tool to help young children's brains develop and get ready for school. Children who often read books with their parents perform well at school.

- Reading helps your child build strong relationships with you and their friends.

- A regular bedtime routine, including reading a book, helps children to sleep better.

- You don't have to be a good reader to read with your child: just do it.

- Choose the same time each day to read with your child (e.g. bedtime). Snuggle up close and enjoy the experience.

- Make it fun. Use different voices and get your child to participate.

- Let your child be the leader, and you follow. Talk about the pictures that interest your child and ask questions.

- It's never too early to start reading with a child, so you can read with your baby too.

Book Dash will distribute its 1 millionth book this year.

Proposed licence changes upset

samantha.lee@peoplespost.co.za

“Pay your TV licence, it’s the right thing to do” could soon apply to your cellphone, tablet, laptop or any other device used to consume media – should the South African Broadcasting Corporation (SABC) have its way.

In a presentation to the parliamentary portfolio committee, deputy communications minister Pinky Kekana said the definition of the TV licence to only include TVs is outdated as modern society consumes media via live streaming sites like Amazon Prime Video, Showmax, DStv Now and Netflix on other devices such as cellphones tablets and laptops.

This means, although many have moved away from owning and consuming media through a television set – hence avoiding paying a TV licence – the government could soon claim these levies from all content consumers, regardless of the device used.

The government states: “If you own a TV set, you must have a valid, paid-up television licence at all times.”

According to the TV licence regulations obtained from the SABC website, the TV licence fees payable are for a device that receives a broadcast transmission signal and any number of devices can be licenced under one TV licence. It is unclear how this will change regarding the proposed new licencing fees.

The proposal is part of the SABC’s financial recovery plan as the indebted broadcaster continues to struggle.

Kekana further stated that subscription streaming sites and pay-tv companies such as DStv should be liable to collect licencing fees.

Users of live streaming services, regardless of whether they consume media on a computer, cellphone, tablet or TV, may be required to pay a TV license.

But consumers are not happy. Following the presentation last week, social media users were up in arms about the proposal.

People’s Post, sister publication of City Vision, polled readers on social media to get their take on their willingness to pay and the overall consensus was that they would not be happy to comply with these regulations.

“I am not supporting any SOE’s (state-owned enterprise) looking to make up for looted funds. Life is already so expensive, they keep pushing it,” says Brandon Lavelot.

Warrick Jantjes agrees, saying: “No thanks. I am not supporting any crooks anymore. Making the rich richer and poor poorer.”

For Jian Groenewalt, this is unreasonable.

“Always looking at new ways to tax the people instead of improving service delivery or dealing with the actual issues they are facing,” she says.

Like many others, Hilge Rhodes questions the need for a “TV licence” for something that was not “even close to a TV”. Many others are calling it unfair for additional fees on top of existing subscriptions, especially in light of many not consuming media produced by the SABC.

“The SABC wants to punish the public for their failure to effectively manage a broadcasting business.

“This is an easy scapegoat. Once again. Why not move with the times and start running your business like a business instead of asking the government and now the consumer to bail you out? Again the representation of poor, ineffective leadership which benefits the pockets of an incompetent and a corrupt government,” says Bevil Lakay.

Tristan Francis says: “No way. We are already paying tons for various subscriptions, we shouldn’t be paying anything more for streaming. Government are (wanting) to suck up every cent they can from us.”

But for Shannon Scholtz, trying to make sense of it all, the proposal was “the funniest thing” he has ever heard.

“The purpose of a TV license is in the name and, to be honest, if you have anything else other than the SABC and ETV channels – which most have already – I don’t see the point of a TV license at all anymore.

“They are probably in debt and loosing out; now they want to charge on other devices. So one should pay TV license, for example, my own phone which I then have to pay a subscription to Netflix as well as buy my own data/internet,” he says.

“But, hey, this is South Africa for you. They will try and take the last cent out of their people not thinking about the cost of living and the already messed-up economy.

“The excuse is it probably would boost the economy. How is an extra TV license going to employ more people? But, as I said, this is South Africa, nothing surprises me anymore.”

As this was a proposal made to a parliamentary portfolio committee, the proposed regulations have not been made official or implemented.

Small devices to tell big stories

Applications for South Africa's first online mobile phone moviemaking film festival are now open – and as the name suggests, anyone using a smartphone, tablet, drone or action camera can enter.

The Mobile Moviemakers Film Festival Cape Town by MMOCA was devised as a way to empower any person with a smart recording device to tell the stories that have never been told. MMOCA is an initiative by the Belgian Chamber of Commerce in South Africa and is powered by the Belgian Consulate in Cape Town, Flanders, Wallonia-Bruxelles International, Flemish Investment and Trade organisation as well as the Wallonia Trade and Investment organisation.

The inspiration behind the mobile festival stems from a need for change.

While traditional filmmaking emphasises the big, latest technology cameras and sound equipment, this festival hopes to reach a much bigger group of aspiring filmmakers. "It's all about storytelling and not the size of your camera," explains festival director Dominique Vandenhout.

"With almost a billion mobile phones on the continent, Africa can become a leader in this new form of visual art."

The competition entry fee is R100, but it's free to students. Categories include documentary, fiction or advertisement and entry will close on Friday 13 November.

Winners will receive a production grant of R10 000 and a jury prize of R5 000. The festival will end off with a Red Carpet-style awards night at the Belgian House.

▶ To submit your entry, visit <https://belgian-chambersa.co.za/mmoca/>.

Aspiring filmmakers and storytellers are encouraged to enter their films.

Live shows return

After being closed for six months, The Baxter Theatre aims to recover the loss of income during lockdown with a unique benefit season called Baxter Back on Stage with Gregory Maqoma and Zolani Mahola.

These two internationally revered artists will share the theatre stage in a limited season from Tuesday 3 to Saturday 7 November.

Championed by the University of Cape Town's vice-chancellor, Prof Mamokgethi Phakeng, the season celebrates The Baxter's return to opening its doors at level one. This will be the first time that these two esteemed artists collaborate and appear on a stage together, each with their own brand-new work.

"This specially-commissioned performance is a coup for The Baxter," says Lara Foot, chief executive officer (CEO) and artistic director.

"I can't think of a classier act. We are honoured to have these two creatives and national treasures on our stage, in one production, to celebrate our return to live theatre and welcoming back audiences and artists."

Maqoma, well-known for his award-winning Rhythm and Beauty trilogies, will debut his brand-new work, No Humour, in collaboration with Xolisile Bongwana, which brings together live sound and movement in a visually appealing landscape of ritual and which forms part of his Human trilogies.

In this work, the choreographer, dancer, teacher and director explores the delicate balance of sensuousness, violence, ethical sensitivity, ugliness, grace and humour, where there is none.

Mahola, founder and former lead singer of Freshlyground, last year officially announced the launch of her solo career as a musician, storyteller and public speaker. Her launch production, The One Who Sings, played to sold-out audiences and received critical acclaim at The Baxter.

For The Baxter Back on Stage season, Mahola, who has adopted the name The One Who Sings, will present the inaugural staging of her multimedia show You Need To Say It, featuring songs from her upcoming 2021 solo album by the same name.

The work is an exploration of song and story, including themes of connection and its opposite, nature and the elements as well as the sanctity of the time of childhood.

She has assembled a stellar team of collaborators comprising visual and auditory storytellers Inka Kendzia and Sean Ou Tim (Mr Sakitumi) and guitarist and film producer Frank Freeman.

Ticket prices for the special gala performance on Tuesday 3 November are R1 000 and include dinner and drinks. Ticket prices for performances from Wednesday to Saturday range from R350 to R500 and include light snacks and drinks.

All performances will be limited to 50% capacity, with alert level one regulations in place. These include the availability of hand sanitisers, tracking and tracing recorded, wearing of masks and physical distancing. Patrons and audience members are advised to arrive at least an hour before the start of the performance to avoid delays.

Clock ticking on firework displays

NETTALIE VILJOEN

With Guy Fawkes and Diwali just a few weeks away, the likelihood of any large legal fireworks displays being held in Cape Town is fizzling out.

In September, the City of Cape Town announced that persons wishing to host fireworks displays would be able to apply for a permit to do so in terms of the law. It further stated that any event where 200-plus attendees were expected, or that would require any infrastructure build, would also require an events permit from the municipality.

When People's Post, sister publication of City Vision, contacted the City last week to inquire whether any applications had been received or approved by the events department, Richard Bosman, executive director for safety and security, said none had been received.

That leaves very little time for interested parties considering that Guy Fawkes will be celebrated on Thursday 5 November and Diwali on Saturday 14 November.

Bosman says applications must be made via the police in Pinelands. "Only thereafter can the applicant go to the Fire Safety section to schedule a site meeting (costs involved)," he says.

According to Bosman, the turnaround time for approval depends on a number of factors, including when the application was made. "If the police approves your application, you will need to contact the City's fire and rescue service's fire life safety section in the area you wish to hold the event.

"They will complete a site inspection, ensure there are no fire hazards and obtain permission from residents and businesses in the area," he explains.

In accordance with the City's events by-law, an application for an event must be submitted at least 15 working days before the date of the event. "The turnaround time usually depends on a number of factors, including the event organiser supplying all required documents timeously," Bosman adds. Should any legal fireworks displays be approved within the next few weeks, it will have to adhere to all regulations as set out in the Disaster Management Act.

People's Post contacted South African Hindu Maha Sabha (Sahms) last week, asking if they were planning to hold any firework displays in and around Cape Town. Sahms is the national body representing the cultural and religious aspirations of South Africa's Hindu community.

Sahms stated they were currently engaged in discussions and would share their plans when they were ready.

As was the case last year, the City has stated that it will not provide any designated fireworks sites for Guy Fawkes, Diwali and New Year's Eve this year.

Mayco member for safety and security JP Smith says the City's decision not to do so is largely based on public sentiment and the high cost linked to hosting such events.

"There is growing public sentiment opposing the use of fireworks, and we have also seen a decreased appetite from subcouncils to approve designated sites. Add to that the cost of running the sites and making resources available to monitor activities and clean up the aftermath, a picture emerges of why the designated site allocation is not feasible," says Smith, warning transgressors against illegally discharging fireworks.

Travel restrictions get mixed emotions

SAMANTHA LEE-JACOBS

The list of banned traveller countries has raised some eyebrows, with some of the most popular tourist nationalities still unable to explore local shores.

At his announcement of the "optimistic" and "cautious" reopening of the international borders to receive tourists, president Cyril Ramaphosa announced a list of restricted countries would be identified based on scientific data, and would be reviewed every two weeks.

While South Africans are able to leave local shores to travel to any country welcoming visitors, the same is not true for most tourists wanting to visit South Africa.

These countries – including the United States of America (USA), United Kingdom (UK), Netherlands, Israel, France, India and Switzerland, among others – are considered high risk and travellers from these countries would not be allowed to enter SA for leisure.

But this is killing an "already dying industry", says tourism officials.

Ronvin Fransman, owner of Grandeur

Travel, says pre-Covid-19, they were facilitating more than 50 bookings for international travel per month.

"The primary destination (of choice by travellers) was Europe (western and eastern Mediterranean), second in line was the Bahamas, USA. Since Covid-19 and lockdown, there has been a huge decrease in bookings to Europe and the States. However this has slightly changed since we moved to lockdown level two," says Fransman.

"Most of the popular land-based destinations and cruises have at least one of the banned countries as part of the cruise itinerary. Therefore our pool of options to advertise is much smaller this present moment," he continues.

Fear, lockdown, international travel bans and a variety of other factors have encouraged locals to start exploring domestically, but key to the survival of the industry remains international tourism.

Responding to the list of restricted nations David Maynier, provincial minister for finance and economic opportunities, agreed that a different approach was needed in addressing the travel restrictions.

"The risk-based approach regulating international travel released by national government is a major blow for the tourism and hospitality sector in the Western Cape. The (sector's) survival is dependent on international leisure travellers in the summer season and for this reason it is critical that we look at smart ways to open our international borders, especially for our key source markets, so that we can save jobs and save the economy in the Western Cape," he says.

Maynier adds that some of the key countries, which generate a large number of tourists to the Western Cape, are among the banned nations. "We have worked hard to ensure that Cape Town and the Western Cape is safe for travellers and ready to welcome international visitors, because our leisure travellers from key source markets such as the United Kingdom, United States, Netherlands and France make the most of our favourable exchange rate and have a high spending potential which positively impacts our local economy," says Maynier.

The impact of business travellers from high risk countries needing to email and liaise with the department of home affairs, the two-week waiting period for review and the Covid-19 test regulations are all reasons for concern, as this may "create a barrier to bookings from visitors in traditional key source markets", Maynier says.

"Indeed, it is unfair to restrict leisure travellers from high-risk countries as there is simply no greater risk of transmission based on the purpose of travel," he adds.

Fransman says while bookings and interest have picked up recently, the unknown is still keeping many homebound. "Pre-Covid-19 our focus was mainly to international destinations and since the move to level one of the national lockdown, we have started to re-introduce both international and local travel (packages)," says Fransman.

He says the opening of provincial borders has seen an increase in domestic tourism as locals try to shake off their cabin fever.

Any tourist entering the borders will only be allowed at OR Tambo, Cape Town or King Shaka international airports, or any port that was operational during lockdown.

Travellers will need to present a negative Covid-19 test, download the Covid-19 SA Alert app and be screened on arrival.

MILESTONE: COMMUNITY UNITES...

Rugby legend gets the nod

UNATHI OBOSE

Excitement was evident on the faces of Nyanga residents when former South African Rugby coach Norman "Nhonho" Mbiko celebrated his 75th birthday at his house on Monday 26 October.

Young and old sang and ululated as Mbiko was introduced to the crowd outside his house.

The event was organised by Black Rugby Veterans and the local community.

All Mbiko's SA rugby blazers were hanged and displayed on the wall for the community to see.

The SA rugby legend, who is currently suffering from Parkinson's disease, was given a new electronic wheelchair donated by The Petro Jackson Player Fund.

He also received a new SA rugby tracksuit, padded jacket, t-shirt, gloves and a beanie from members of the South African Rugby Union (SARU).

Mbiko won the Women's Rugby World Cup Sevens in 2003 in Fiji. He also won the u.19 rugby World Cup in France in 2007.

His first national involvement in rugby was in 1967 when he captained the South African black team against several international teams including England, France, Italy and the All Blacks locally and abroad.

After the unification in 1992 Mbiko was appointed as a coach by the Western Province and later by SARU for various national rugby teams.

He won two World Cups before retiring from the sport in 2017.

A friend and former teammate Justice Mshudulu said Mbiko deserved more than what he got.

He described him as someone who dedicated his life to the sport, a humble and disciplined individual.

"Norman didn't want to lose on the field. He would literally cry when we lost the game. He used to shout at the players on the field, especially when someone lost the ball," said Mshudulu, adding that Mbiko was the best scrum-half during their time.

Family spokesperson Mlandeli Mbiko labelled his older brother as a straightforward person.

"We were 10 children in our family. Norman is the firstborn and is like a father figure to us. He is disciplined, generous and a friendly person," said Mlandeli.

He said his brother had made history for putting Nyanga on the map for being the captain of the South African Black team and won two world cups during his tenure as a coach.

SARU senior manager at government and stakeholder relations Khaya Mayedwa described the event as a good thing and it inspired a lot of people.

"It is a great thing to honour a person while he is still alive instead of waiting for him to die then we start honouring him. The yesteryear players played a big role to pave way for current players in South Africa. Mbiko played in the national team during a difficult time. They were playing for the love of the game," said Mayedwa.

He described him as an asset to the sport fraternity. He wished him many more years of life.

Former Lagunya Rugby Football Club player in Nyanga and current citing commissioner in SA Rugby, Louis Mzomba, said Norman was his coach during his playing days.

"I grew up under his leadership. He was like a father figure to us. He taught us discipline and how to conduct ourselves on and off the pitch," said Mzomba. He said Mbiko was a role model in the community.
